Not illustrated. 1884 Excerpt: .found together in Belbury Camp, near Higher Lychett, Poole Dorset. This camp (see Plan on next page) is nearly circular, with a south aspect, the ground gradually sloping for about 700 feet to a small stream. Its rampart on the north side is the best preserved, showing a height of 10 feet above the external ditch; that on the east is in process of destruction by the plough. Its length and breadth are each about 11 or 12 chains, making an inside area of rather more than 10 acres. The entrances east and west are guarded by the vallum being brought inside about 82 feet. The centres of north and south are open to the north for a road and to the south for the water supply. The breadth of the vallum was 41 feet in its present condition. The objects and a large quantity of wrought iron were all found together in the western side from 2 feet to 3 feet underground whilst draining the camp. The antiquities discovered were as follows: --Two bronze cast figures about 4 inches long with bull s head and horns. Two small bronze ornaments pierced with holes for fastening on wood, and ornamented on the sides and tops. Two large bronze rings, 3 inches in diameter, with small rings encircling them for attachment. An anchor (see fig. opposite) 4 feet 6 inches long, 27 inches from point to point of the fluke, the main stem varying from 2 to...
