In order to meet the demand of the immense amount of capital to be used in this direction, mines will be excavated, and in order to turn the raw material into finished products, factories will be opened. Already many Chinese merchants have shown to the Government their willingness to invest money along these lines. But one may ask, Where shall the New Government get enough money to start the business and who will direct it? The first part of the question has already been thoroughly discussed by the second speaker in connection with the present loan case. The second part of the question will lead us to the educational side. China since 1900 has remodelled her system of education based entirely upon modern principles. Institutions of four grades, -Grammar School, Middle School, College Preparatory School and University, had been established throughout the country. After the Revolution according to private information the number of schools of all grades is increasing rapidly. The New Government has already declared that compulsory education will be enforced, immediately after the national census will have been completed. But the demand for men in governmental affairs, in engineering lines, and in scientific researches, is so bad that in the near future we will see that still more schools will be opened by both the government and citizens. At the same time hundreds of intelligent men will be sent out to study all sorts of sciences in both Europe and America. Foreign advisors...
