Let him whose absence breaks my heart, Again in pleasing dreams appear; Though forced by fate, severe, to part, Oh! let me fancy he is near. Last night, sweet sleep, thou wast most kind, My dreams were as Elysium gay; Methought I gatherd flowers, to bind The brows of him whos far away And then I hung upon his arm, And clasped his hand with fond caress And heard that voice that used to charm Tell me of love and happiness. Thou bringst to mind that ardent love Which nought could ever turn aside; Which rose each obstacle above, And every power, but Heaven, defied. Each wretched day, each sleepless night, But brings me nearer to the grave; While he, for whom each toil was light, Is far away, and cannot save. O were it not, that on my...
